The sports medicine program of Midwest Orthopaedics at RUSH is comprised of six nationally respected physicians: Drs. Bernard R. Bach, Jr., (director), Charles A. Bush-Joseph, Brian J. Cole, Anthony A. Romeo, Gregory P. Nicholson, and Kathy Weber. Our physicians pride themselves in patient care, education, and research expertise. We care for adolescent, high school, recreational, collegiate, professional and senior athletes. We give expert care in arthroscopy of the knee, shoulder, elbow, hip and ankle, knee ligament reconstruction (including anterior cruciate ligament), shoulder instability and rotator cuff surgery, shoulder and elbow replacement surgery, meniscal surgery, cartilage restoration procedures including meniscal transplants and Carticel, Achilles tendon ruptures, and trauma related to sports injuries. Our primary care sports medicine specialist, Dr. Weber, has interests in stress fractures, osteoporosis, female sports injuries, and prevention.

Midwest Orthopaedics at RUSH is an 18 member, highly specialized orthopaedic practice based primarily, but not exclusively, at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center. Our group cares for disorders of the musculoskeletal system including injuries and disorders of bones, joints, ligaments, cartilage, and nerves. Specialists provide state-of-the-art care in areas of sports medicine, knee ligament injuries, cartilage injuries, shoulder and elbow injuries, adult joint reconstruction, spinal disorders, hand and wrist conditions, foot and ankle injuries, children's orthopaedic disorders, osteoporosis, and nonoperative orthopaedic conditions.
